

WHIMBREL

Migrates from southern Canada to South America in one non-stop flight of about 4,000 km (2,599 miles).

GREATEST THREAT

NO HUNTING

In 2011, a Whimbrel known as “Machi” left its nesting site in Canada and headed south to non-breeding grounds. After flying through a hurricane, it landed safely, only to be hunted illegally.

HOW CAN YOU HELP?

Follow all seasonal hunting laws.

KNOW THE LAWS AND FOLLOW THEM.

The Mexican National Strategy for Shorebird Conservation was formed in 2008 to work with other countries, such as Canada and the U.S., to protect shorebird habitats in many countries.
